Abstract

The report lays out, in chart form, the appearance of question batteries used to measure values and predispositions in NES traditional Time Series and Pilot Studies data collections. The boundaries between values and predispositions on the one hand and policy positions on the other hand are not always clear. For the purposes of this report, values and predispositions have been construed quite narrowly. What is included here are only those measures which the NES Board of Overseers explicitly decided to treat as values and predispositions, e.g., egalitarianism. Others included are: Moral traditionalism, racial prejudice, individualism, government interventionism, patriotism, nationalism, militarism, true American, moral autonomy, Feminism and women's role, religious belief, and post-materialism.
