ABOUT THE NATIONAL ELECTION STUDIES

The Election Studies of the Survey Research Center started in 1948 and have been conducted every two years during the past three decades. Data gathered from these studies represent an invaluable contribution to the better understanding of the wants, aspirations and political behavior of American citizens. Each new Election Study adds to the value of the series, for not only are we able to capture people's feelings and opinions with regard to the particular historical moment they are experiencing, we are also able, once the data are gathered, to compare present feelings and opinions with those voiced in the past. Our understanding of the political and social life of our nation is sharpened as we study current opinions and behaviors and continue to explore their trends over the years.

Two well-known books resulting from the analysis of NES data are The American Voter (1960) and Elections and the Political Order (1966), both by Angus Campbell, Philip Converse, Warren Miller, and Donald Stokes. In addition, literally scores of other books, doctoral dissertations and scholarly articles in the field of American government and politics have made use of these data. Our current Election Study bibliography lists entries of publications and research works using Election Studies data. With our data base now extending over 30 years, historians as well as students of contemporary government are beginning to show an interest in the interview data.

Those of you who have joined our staff recently might be interested to know that this archive of data is regarded so highly by students of American government that in 1962 the Interuniversity Consortium for Political Research was established in Ann Arbor partly for the purpose of making our political data readily available to other students of American politics besides ourselves. Today more than 240 American and foreign universities and colleges are members of this Consortium.

Since 1978, the studies have been conducted under the auspices of grants made by the National Science Foundation to provide long-term support for the National Election Studies. In effect, the grant acknowledges that the Election Studies are a national resource of great value to those engaged in social science research. Because the studies have proven invaluable to so many researchers, NSF has agreed to fund the studies through 1988. The NSF and NES have encouraged, through financial support and other means, the involvement of a large number of scholars in these ventures.
nine-person Board of Overseers drawn from the national community of social scientists exists to supervise the implementation of the grant, set priorities for future studies and link members of the social science community to present and future National Election Studies. Since 1978, the Elections Studies are best described as a collaborative venture involving the study staff, the Board of Overseers and a committee of scholars interested in electoral research.

ABOUT THE 1985 PILOT STUDY

As mentioned above, the "traditional" Election Studies are conducted every two years, with a post election study during non-presidential election years and a pre-post study during presidential years. About 60% of those studies is devoted to measures of attitudes we have been studying for a long time; the questions which are repeated year after year are referred to as "CORE." The other 40% is usually "new" material, measures which have been tried and are perceived to have merit and support from the community of users, but have not been repeated, or not repeated often enough to be classed as CORE.

Included in our NSF grant is a certain amount of money to develop these new measures and study procedures. One outgrowth of this was the 1984 Rolling Cross-Section study. Another is the practice of off-year pilot studies to test new material for possible inclusion in the traditional Election Studies. And that is where we are now.

The purpose of the 1985 Pilot Study is to develop new measures for possible inclusion in the 1986 and 1988 National Election Studies. There are eight subject areas for which these measures are being developed: "Morality," political information, group identification, racial attitudes, women and the elderly, work participation, congress, and issues. In the Pilot Study are also a few stray "chestnuts" (CORE questions), which are there for the purposes of validation and control.

The eight contributors to the 1985 Pilot Study are scholars of political science and political psychology from seven universities around the country. They brought to us "babies" they have been interested in and, in some cases, tested in other contexts. We compiled their questions and asked some Ann Arbor Telephone Facility interviewers to pretest them for us. Those interviewers were truly wonderful -- they turned the pretest questionnaire upside down and inside out with the enthusiasm of hungry lions over a piece of meat. The Pilot questionnaire reflects heavily their experiences with the questions and their insightful suggestions for revisions (so if you don't like it, you know who to talk to...).

Data from the 1985 Pilot Study will be combined with data from the 1984 Pre-Post Election Studies and released in mid-March, 1986. While anyone can have access to these data, the primary users will be the eight people who contributed to the Pilot Study content. They will be doing analyses (quickly!) in order to determine what worked and what didn't, and make recommendations about new questionnaire content to the 1986 Election Study planning committee.

This study is being conducted by the Institute for Social Research's Center for Political Studies. Dr. Warren E. Miller, former director of the Center, is the principal investigator (now orchestrating the endeavor from sunny Arizona State). Dr. Steven Rosenstone, a member of the Board of Overseers, chairs the 1985 Pilot Study committee. Santa Traugott is the Director of Studies and Jeanne Castro is the Field Director for NES. Marlene Segal is acting as NES’s AATF Field Manager.

FIELD NOTES

SPECIAL FEATURES OF THE PILOT STUDY

A. SAMPLE: The sample for the 1985 Pilot Study is a sub-sample of respondents who were interviewed in person (meaning that they have never been interviewed over the phone) on the 1984 Pre-Post Election Studies. Their experience with us has consisted of two 70 minute-interviews, the most recent of which was conducted 10-12 months ago. We have recently mailed out to these respondents the Report to Respondents for the 1984 studies, copies of which will be distributed to interviewers at the prestudy conference. --So, they have heard from us recently...

The selection of respondents from the 1984 sample was made to retain a national cross-section sample. The cross-section sample is supplemented that with a sample of the elderly (respondents who are 60 years of age or older). By the end of Wave II, we expect to have 300 cross-section respondents who will have completed both Waves, and an additional 40 respondents who are elderly, whose answers can be combined with the answers from the elderly cross-section respondents, bringing the total number of folks in the "elderly sample" to 100.

B. DESIGN: There are two "waves" ("I" and "II") of the Pilot Study, meaning that the same respondent will be interviewed twice, with at least a three week interval between interviews. For each wave, there are two "forms" ("A" and "B") so that some questions can be tested in two formats. This Instruction Book covers Wave I, Forms A and B only.

C. DATES:
Prestudy Conferences for the 1985 Pilot Study are scheduled for the large conference room in ISR on

- Thursday, Nov. 7, at 5:00 p.m.
- Friday, Nov. 8, at 10:00 a.m.

Interviewing on Wave I beings on Monday, Nov. 11
Interviewing on Wave II begins on Friday, Dec. 6
(We will have a second set of pre-study conferences for Wave II, dates and times to be determined)
Interviewing on Wave I ends on Thurs, Dec. 12
Interviewing on Wave II ends on Monday, Jan. 13

D. EDITING: In order to administer the Wave I questionnaire, information specific to the respondent will be pre-edited into several of the questions. Information about the respondent's sex, age, and race appear on the label on the cover sheet, and is used to complete the checkpoint on p. 12, E1. The State and Congressional District information, which also appears on the label, is used by pre-editors to determine the names of the representative and a senator entered in Section B of the questionnaire. Questionnaires you receive for production interviewing will be fully pre-edited.

E. THE PRACTICE INTERVIEW: You will be provided with a Wave I, Form A questionnaire for the purposes of the practice interview. Section B is pre-edited with the names for Michigan Congressional District 2 -- so you will need to practice on someone living in the Ann Arbor area.
Questions have been added to Section E for the purposes of the practice interview only to allow you to get the respondent's age and race, and therefore complete the checkpoint at E1.

Conduct a practice interview, not with a relative, preferably with someone you don't know or don't know well. Treat it as a production interview, completely edited with a thumbnail sketch and the face sheet filled out. Bring your practice interview with you to the prestudy conference.

F. LENGTH: A Wave I interview, both Forms A and B, takes about 28 minutes to administer.

G. THE QUESTION-BY-QUESTION OBJECTIVES: Writing q-by-q's for brand new questions is difficult, because objectives are usually developed from our experience with the questions. Thus, you will find the instructions we have provided "sparse," less instructions than explanations of what we hope to learn. In fact, there is so little to say at this point, that we decided not to reproduce the questionnaire in the Instruction Book, but simply provide page and question number references. We have, however, reproduced the portions of Form B which differ from Form A. Please go over these Form B pages carefully, as we will need to review them during the prestudy conference.

H. THERE IS NO REPORT TO RESPONDENTS PLANNED FOR THE 1985 PILOT STUDY: So, for heaven's sake, don't promise anyone a report!

J. RESPONDENTS AREN'T TOLD ANYWHERE IN QUESTIONNAIRE THAT THERE WILL BE ANOTHER WAVE: We don't want them to know either...

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ABOUT THE STUDY

The following is a list of the questions we think you are likely to be asked before a respondent agrees to be interviewed. We hope we've written helpful, informative and persuasive responses. Feel free to paraphrase. We urge you to keep the list handy.

What is this study all about?
This study deals with several aspects of life in our nation. The topics covered include questions about people's work, social and political activities, feelings about issues discussed frequently in the news these days, and evaluations of current government policies.
How is this study different from the last one I was interviewed for?

In 1984, we interviewed you around the time of the election. Much of our study was necessarily devoted to the campaigns going on at the time and your evaluation of the candidates. With the current project, we are interested in how well you think America is doing on social and political issues. There is very little in this interview about candidates, politicians or elections.

Why are you calling me again? Can't you talk to someone else?

The current study is what is called a “follow-up study.” When this study is complete we will combine the answers from everyone in this study with the answers from the last study. This will give us a much larger body of information to work with, but in order for it to be valid, we have to talk to the same group of people. You are, therefore, irreplaceable -- we can't replace the answers you might give us with those from anyone else.

Why is this study important?

This country has gone through major economic and political changes in the last several years. In order to understand those changes and their impact on the lives of Americans, we need to talk to people to find out how things are going for them now, how they feel about their government, and how they think things might change in the future.

The data gathered are available, in statistical form, to anyone wishing to use them. Government policy makers and advisors will use the data as well as scholars and students of political, social and economic life of the nation. The research keeps policy makers informed about how Americans view their government, how people evaluate what the government does, what they currently find satisfying or dissatisfying in their lives, and what directions they would like to see their government take.

What happens to my answers?

Interviewers at the Survey Research Center are trained to record respondents' answers objectively and accurately. They have pledged to keep in confidence anything said in an interview.

Once the interview is taken, answers from participants will be used for research purposes only; all names, addresses, and other identifying information will be removed from the answers before they are processed.
Who is doing the study?
The study is conducted by the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center under a grant from the National Science Foundation. The Survey Research Center is one of the world's largest and most respected academic survey research organizations. It has been conducting national surveys for over 35 years.

Who is the study director?
Dr. Warren E. Miller is the principal investigator. (He is one of the authors of the foremost text used in studying the American Elections. The book is The American Voter, which was based on interviews taken from people like you.)

Where is the report you promised to send me when I was interviewed last year?
The Report to Respondents was sent to all 1984 survey participants the last week of October (1985). If you haven't yet received your copy, I will be happy to put another in the mail to you immediately.
QUESTION-BY-QUESTION OBJECTIVES

Page 1:

A1a-e Just for your information, these are the "morality" questions -- a special area of study for the Pilot.

Page 2:

A2 This is a CORE question, and the following is the CORE Q-by-Q:

Here we are attempting to measure the respondent's party identification. By party identification we mean a person's feeling of attachment or belonging to a party. The question is intended to pin down the respondent's "usual" or customary general sense of party affiliation, not particularly how he/she voted in the last election.

If the R calls himself/herself a member of a party other than the Democratic or the Republican, check the "other" box rather than classifying him/her as an "Independent."

A few respondents may shy away from the question with responses such as, "I am an American." Such evasions should be probed further with something such as, "Well, a lot of us who feel that we are good Americans also think of ourselves as Democrats, Republicans, and so forth. Generally speaking, do you usually think of yourself...?"

In the A2a, A2b, and A2c follow-ons concerning strength of closeness, we are again interested in R's usual party feelings. However, if R mentions any recent change in feelings toward a party, be sure to record that in the margin.

B1 All of Section B has been pre-edited for the state and congressional district in which our respondent resided at the time of the pre-election interview in 1984. If the respondent has moved since that time, the names pre-edited into the questions may be inappropriate. We decided, therefore, that for the purposes of the Pilot we would simply skip movers (respondent who have moved from the address given on the coversheet label) out of Section B.

B2 & B3 The respondent may volunteer that he/she doesn't know anything about the Representative/Senator. Please record this and move on to the next question.
Pages 4 - 6

B4-B6 These questions could be perceived by a respondent to be a “test.” We would prefer, therefore, that you not push the respondent by probing “Don't Know” responses. Please accept “don't know's” and move on. Note that in B4b and B8 if the respondent says (again) that he/she knows nothing about the Rep/Sen, further questions on that person are skipped.

Page 7

C1-C3 These questions are here to try to determine how many people have participated in “nontraditional” forms of political behavior. Obviously, not all of the “political behaviors” listed are “nontraditional.” Pretesters told us that while respondents didn’t seem to mind answering the questions, they were uncomfortable if they hadn’t participated in at least one of the “behaviors.” So, we tried to revise the questions, with something for everyone.

Page 8

C4 The question in general is a CORE question. However, the categories (C4a-C4m) are not necessarily CORE. The categories are very general on purpose. If you are asked, for example, “What do you mean by ‘welfare?’ Unemployment compensation? Food stamps? Welfare payments?” the correct response is “Welfare, in general.” The probe, “Should federal spending on ____ be increased, decreased, or kept about the same?” should be repeated as necessary to keep the possible responses in the respondent’s mind.

Pages 9 - 11

Section D This is the first experimental section. In Form A, the respondent’s self-placement on issues and his/her placement of others follow each other. In Form B, we ask only for self-placement here, and then in Section J ask for the placement of others. As you have probably guessed, we are trying to determine whether placement of others is colored by self-placement.

Note that in both forms, D1a and D2a appear in parenthesis. This is because respondents will often tell you what they think after you’ve read the stem question (D1 or D2). Should that happen, mark box “1” in the stem and the correct box in D1a or D2a, and move on as directed.
The questions above E1 concerning age and race appear only in the practice questionnaires. In the "real thing," E1 will have been pre-edited and all you have to do is follow the skip. We encourage you to cross out pages you won't be using in this series before you begin an interview -- just so you don't make a mistake in the heat of the moment and end up on the wrong page.

The section may look long, but keep in mind that there are six sets of question, only one of which (or none, if the R is a young male) the respondent is asked.

E2 (and its fellows) In the pretest, some respondents mentioned to us that they had never worked, and therefore, literally speaking, "retired" and "a working woman/person" seemed inappropriate. However, what we're after here is how the person thinks of himself/herself -- and people who have never worked for pay often consider themselves either retired or working (but not for pay).

Page 21
F1 This series is called "citizen duty," another area for which the Pilot study is developing new measures. It is also a set of questions asked in two formats -- see Form B for the alternative wording.

Page 22
F2 This series is meant to pit what the respondent perceives the government to be doing about certain problems concerning race against what the respondent feels the government should be doing. In reading this series, it's important to help the respondent keep it mind which question, "is" or "should", he/she is answering -- and the only way to do that is with voice inflection.

F4-F5 These questions have very slight wording variations in Form B, the purpose being to see which wording works best.
A series like this of "feeling" type words has been used successfully in other Election Studies to get respondents' feelings about the president and other candidates. Now we are experimenting with a similar series to find out how respondents feel about preferential treatment for blacks, and later, on page 26, 65, about relations between blacks and whites.

An alternative question appears in Form B.

This is a CORE question, but its principal purpose in the Pilot study is to get you into the correct series of work-related questions -- the differences among the series principally being that of asking questions in the present or past tense. We will, therefore, not burden you here with the full blast of q-by-q's. No matter what category the respondent selects, if R is working now he/she will end up in the "working now" sequence; or if R is not working now but has worked sometime, he/she will be asked about the most recent job.

(Also see J3, Form B) This is a closing statement, which you may reword to something you are more comfortable with. The principal elements are to thank the respondent, tell him/her how important he/she is to our research, and not say anything about our calling back in three weeks.
